What is real and what is not? We are really sure of being able to really understand the world around us, or we live hiding behind mere illusions, dreams and therefore destined to fade in the face of reality?

Eight short stories and two poems lead us to discover the stories of paper that we tell ourselves, in pale attempt to mask the reality to look like more of what we want to what it is. Doing so, however, we give up voluntarily to admire its many facets and secret passages, which extend into wonderful shapes on the great book of life.
