The last injured people we saw that evening was a woman. She carried her child on the back who was shot to death on the running with blood dropping along the road behind. It was so lucky that the bullet did not penetrate through the child's body and shot the mother as well. She stopped where we stood and laid her child on the ground. It was a girl with her eyes open and a suddenly stopped smile on her face. The bullet nearly penetrated her swollen body for we could see the bullet head. The mother cried and shook her daughter's body. But she was too grieved to shed any tear.
